Overview

It isn't unusual to feel nerves before doing a presentation or running a training session. The most competent presenter still gets butterflies from time to time. The difference between how those nerves affect the presentation, or how good the presentation is will come down to skill and confidence of the presenter.

We will introduce you to the tools and techniques of expert presenters and the basics needed to train whilst providing you with lots of opportunities to practise your new skills and receive objective feedback.

Who will benefit?

This programme will develop the presentation skills of both new and experienced presenters who are expected to convey messages or ideas to groups of people whilst introducing the basics of training methodology.
